Preparing for the Hurricane Season

The Coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic is still with us, and its effects are likely to be felt for some time to come. As we all continue practicing social distancing, personal hygiene, and personal responsibility as essential obligations for preventing further spread, we can perhaps turn our attention to the next hit of drama: hurricane season.

As you read this, hurricane season is already 23 weeks old. It officially started on June 1. Leading international centers’ predictions for the 2020 season are calling for it to be “above-average” to “extremely active.”

This year’s average forecast for all thirteen weather forecasting centers is for eight hurricanes and seventeen named storms. Four of these hurricanes are predicted to be major storms (category 3 or stronger). An average season sees seven hurricanes and twelve named storms. The Colorado State University Tropical Meteorology Project team (one of five centers noted) “The spread in the early season predictions is somewhat less than we have seen in recent years.” In other words, the various models are in very close agreement. As of mid-May, the first named storm (“Arthur”) has already formed.

What does all of this mean? I hope it means in part that, while we have been largely keeping ourselves at home, we have dedicated at least some of our activities to improving our hurricane preparedness status.

Let’s consider our very recent history with hurricanes. Since 2010 the Town has issued four evacuation orders (Matthew, Irma, Florence, and Dorian). Take a moment to reflect on what you did for those storms. Did you evacuate? (If you didn’t, do you wish you had?) What did you do, where did you go, what did you take with you? What did you leave behind? What difficulties did you encounter along your route, or was your journey relatively smooth? What did you take with you? What did you wish you had taken that you didn’t? What preparations did you undertake to secure your home? How were conditions at home when you returned? Had you anticipated and planned for a loss of power? Did you know where to find the items you needed to access quickly to help in any cleanup so you could start using your home again (for example, boots, flashlights, tools for clearing debris)?

Now, consider from your reflection what might have made many of these activities easier. Early evacuation would have made the journey smoother (you could choose your own route to your destination and avoid being subjected to the specific route designated by law enforcement). From your personal checklists you would have known what to take with you (important documents such as copies of insurance policies). Using your preparedness checklist you would have stocked up on necessary supplies (batteries, water, even food items and pet supplies). You would have gone to the ATM before it no longer had any cash to disperse and the gas station to fill up before it no longer had any gas. Certainly you were monitoring the various weather resources for the latest storm information. The Town makes it a regular service to help residents prepare for the season. Our website has numerous links to resources that can help with your planning decisions and activities (www.townofseabrookisland.org/emergency-resources.html). We also provide printed materials, available in the lobby at Town Hall, about preparation, evacuation routes, and supplies to have on hand.

The Department of Homeland Security also has valuable resources for planning and preparation, including:

- A comprehensive step-by-step guide, “Recently updated material related to Coronavirus issues,”
- A list of supplies you should have on hand, including handling special circumstances for your family and household (people and pets) and many links for other resources.

Covid-19 affecting where we live?

One big piece of the Covid-19 puzzle: Where will we live?

A few months back, the first waves of coronavirus came uninvited many ordinary citizens to roam ever farther pastures. If you are a professional in D.C. or New York, which are known places that the crowds flock to, you might have had some of the same questions about the crowd's temporary measures. But as lockdowns have continued to drag on, it's become an open question: What happens when we can gather in large groups again? And will the same conditions of social distancing take effect?

The COVID-19 pandemic has shown us that we cannot rely on all the well-meaning intentions of the local community to protect us from the disease. We must remain vigilant and take necessary precautions to reduce the spread of the virus. It is still important to practice physical distancing and wear masks in public to prevent the spread of COVID-19.

Imaginings of the Facts

The column addresses other risks to health besides the obvious one. One notable risk is the risk of the flu. The column points out that the flu is a common flu. The virus is thought to be similar to the flu virus, and it is commonly found in the community. However, some concrete facts have been discovered about COVID-19.

For instance, we know that COVID-19 is a novel coronavirus, and it is still in the early stages of understanding how it spreads. The virus is transmitted through respiratory droplets, and it is highly contagious. It is essential to wear masks and maintain social distancing to prevent the spread of the virus. It is also important to wash our hands frequently and avoid touching our face.

When it comes to COVID-19, the situation is evolving rapidly. It is essential to stay informed and follow the guidelines from public health officials. With the ongoing pandemic, it is crucial to practice safe and responsible behaviors to protect ourselves and others.

The Bottom Line

The COVID-19 pandemic has taught us the importance of the community's role in maintaining public health. It is essential to practice physical distancing and wear masks in public to prevent the spread of COVID-19.

We can do our part by following the guidelines from public health officials. With the ongoing pandemic, it is crucial to practice safe and responsible behaviors to protect ourselves and others. By doing our part, we can help to prevent the spread of the virus and protect our community.

COVID-19 has caused a significant impact on our daily lives, and it is crucial to stay informed and follow the guidelines from public health officials. REPORTER’S NOTEBOOK – “Neighbors Helping Neighbors” is the phrase that seems to have been the driving force behind the Seabrook Island Village Volunteers (VTV) and the Village Voice. Two feature articles, one appearing in the May 6 edition of The Island Packet and this one, point to the great things that have been accomplished by a small group of people who have submitted to the workings of the Village Voice. It’s a testament to the amazing devotion of time and public-spirited efforts of the Village Voice and the Village Volunteers.

Dedicated SIV volunteers are always ready to assist a member requesting a service. Paul McLaughlin and his wife, Patti, have been active members for six years. Both are retired nurses and doing the volunteer work makes them very happy. Their services have included delivering groceries to a neighbor at no cost. They are available to non-members, as well, at 843-557-2088. By computer connection, the volunteers can help by singing birthday songs, playing favorite music, a radio station, or just talking for a few minutes. The volunteers are quickly familiarized with the needs of a member requesting a service, and they will call back within two business days.

By far, the most common requests are for assistance in grocery deliveries, picking up medications, and transportation for groceries and medical needs, computer repair and friendly visits as well as regular telephone calls. The volunteers are immediately available to non-members, as well, and are ready to assist with all the tasks above, whenever the need arises.

Early in the year, when the Red Knots began their migration from the Canadian Arctic to the Delaware Bay, south to the New England coast, members of the Village Voice had called a meeting to try to work with the SIV volunteers. The Village Voice had been working with the SIV volunteers for a while and asked the SIV volunteers to consider helping out the people on the island. The SIV volunteers had been doing this for some time and had worked with the Village Voice to keep the islanders informed of what was happening in the community.

Ticket Purchase Windows Delayed and Registration Extended for the 2021 PGA Championship at The Ocean Course at Kiawah Island Golf Resort

A message from Championship Director, Scott Reid:

Ticket Purchase Windows for the 2021 PGA Championship will open in two phases. The first phase will be held August 9-11, during the PGA Championship at Kiawah Island Golf Resort. Ticket purchase windows were originally scheduled to begin in May, 2021. The delay applies only to ticket purchase windows and has no influence on the regularly scheduled dates of the 2021 PGA Championship, May 17-23, 2021.

Panels who completed registrations prior to Tuesday, April 28 will receive an email with more information on updated purchase windows. Fans who did not complete registration prior to Tuesday, April 28 have until Noon ET, Friday, May 7 to register. Fans will be notified of their registrant status via their email on Friday, May 7. The Ocean Course at Kiawah Island Golf Resort has the lowest number of available rooms to support the businesses that have placed ads in this issue of the directory. The ad proceeds (net of book production and distribution) are awarded to local businesses.

To ensure widespread access to the most in-demand ticket types, 2021 PGA Championship tickets are sold exclusively through a free, no-obligation, online registration process. By registering, fans can hold their place in line – first come, first served – for the opportunity to purchase tickets when they go on sale August 9, 2021. The earlier you register, the better your chances to acquire one of the most popular ticket types when we sell out of advance of past PGA Championships.
